

This document includes instructions for how you can un-mask the final submissions for epiSTEME9 conference proceedings papers. Un-masking involves including the information about authors, grants, projects, etc. that were redacted for reviewing purposes.

Instructions for including the author information at the top of the page:

TYPE TITLE HERE (STYLE IS HEADING 1, 16PT BOLD)

Author1 Name^{1, a, !}, Author2 Name^{2, b, #} and Author3 Name^{3, c, *}

¹Institutional Affiliation of Author1

²Institutional Affiliation of Author2

³Institutional Affiliation of Author3

^aPronouns for Author1, ^bPronouns for Author2, ^cPronouns for Author3

[!]Email for Author1, [#]Email for Author2, ^{*}Email for Author3

An example of how this might look like is:

MASCULITIES AND SCIENCE

Deepa Chari^{1, a, !}, Ayush Gupta^{1, b, #} and John Doe^{2, c, *}

¹Homi Bhabha Center for Science Education, Mumbai, Maharashtra, India.

²ABC Public University, BigTown, GreatState, SomeCountry

^ashe/her/hers, ^bthey/them/theirs, ^che/him/his or they/them/theirs

[!]deepa@hbcse.tifr.res.in, [#]ayush@hbcse.tifr.res.in, ^{*}johndoe@abc.edu

Use the style “epi Authors” (from the Styles pane) for the line with the author names. This style is included in the paper template.

In the example above, since Author1 (Chari) and Author2 (Gupta) had the same institutional affiliation, that was listed once with the same superscript for both authors. Author3 had different institutional affiliation and so that was listed on a separate line with a different superscript. Use the style “epi Affiliation” (from the Styles pane) for the line with the author names. This style is included in the paper template.

Assumptions about associating names with gendered pronouns don’t translate across cultural boundaries. These assumptions can also run the risk of mis-gendering queer and transgender scholars when communicating with/about them. You can learn more about the gendered nature of personal pronouns at <https://www.mypronouns.org/>. We encourage you to list your pronouns, but this is not mandatory. In the example above, we show how the pronouns for the author can be listed. Use the same style “epi Affiliation” (from the Styles pane) for the line with the author pronouns. This style is included in the paper template.

The next line lists the emails of the authors to ease future communications from readers. Use the style “epi Email” (from the Styles pane) for the line with the author names. This style is included in the paper template.

Instructions for unmasking other parts of the paper

When submitting your final submission, please take care to make sure that any in text references to publications by any of the authors follow the APA 7th edition style (see details in the paper template document). The bibliographic listing of the publication in the References section should also follow the APA 7th edition style.

Any references to project names, grants, funding agencies, acknowledgements, etc that were masked for review should be unmasked and included when submitting the final version.